WASHINGTON, Feb. 3.—Director General Hines testified before the senate commerce committee that he did not believe in government ownership. He advocated organization of a few big railway companies, subject to close government supervision, including government representation in the directorates. He said it would "give the public and labor the benefits of government ownership, preserve private initiative and avoid political difficulties which, perhaps, are inseparable from government ownership."

Mr. Hines advocated McAdoo's recommendation for a five-year extension of government control. Mr. Hines said if the extension was not granted he believed it would be best to relinquish government control without awaiting objection at the end of the twenty-one month period. He added: "It seems unthinkable that any suggestion for early relinquishment should be put forward as a leverage for forcing extension. I think the entire subject ought to be determined by the logic of the situation."
